

The Voice of the Editor-in-Chief

Dear Colleagues,

Another year has passed since the first issue of "Clinical Diabetology" published entirely in English was released. It was another year of intense work of the Editorial Board. Specifically, efforts were made to select from the submitted manuscripts those that are believed to be the most interesting and most valuable in terms of their scientific value and potential to be implemented in everyday clinical practice. I would like to thank you all for submitting the manuscripts and active participation in creating and improving our journal. It is important and worth emphasizing that the number of original papers received from foreign authors is constantly increasing, which not only significantly broadens our perspective on broadly-defined diabetes care in various countries but also improves the rank of "Clinical Diabetology". Therefore we have decided that the journal will be submitted for evaluation for coverage in other databases: first the Emerging Sources Citation Index (ESCI), a part of the Web of Science Core Collection, and then in PubMed Central. As the practical management of patients with diabetes should be based primarily on knowledge derived from Evidence Based Medicine (EBM), the reference to the EBM principles indicating levels of evidence underlying the recommendations has been introduced in most chapters of the 2018 PTD Guidelines (which have been published annually since 2005). In addition, the most important references supporting the recommendations are listed at the end of respective chapters.

With the second issue of "Clinical Diabetology" this year, I would like to emphasize once again that it is thanks to you that the journal has its current form and shape. I look forward to further fruitful cooperation with you in creating the journal of ever higher scientific quality and practical value. Have a nice reading.
