

Artur Nowiński, MD, graduated from the Medical Faculty, Medical University of Warsaw in 2014. In 2016, he began work as a resident in the Department of Cardiology, Postgraduate Medical School at Grochowski Hospital, Warsaw, Poland. He is also a PhD student at the Department of Experimental Physiology and Pathophysiology of the Medical University of Warsaw. His main research area is the central regulation of blood pressure.

Marcin Ufnal, MD, PhD, is an Associate Professor of Physiology at the Medical University of Warsaw, Poland, and the Head of the Department of Experimental Physiology and Pathophysiology at the Faculty of Medicine and Dentistry of the Medical University of Warsaw. He is also a specialist in family medicine and works as a general practitioner. The experimental and theoretical work of doctor Ufnal is concentrated on mechanisms involved in the aetiology of hypertension. His latest research focuses on interaction between gut bacteria and the circulatory system.