

Supplementary material

Alexandre A, Sá-Couto D, Campinas A, et al. Concomitant high-risk pulmonary embolism and paradoxical ischemic stroke: aspiration thrombectomy as a treatment option. Kardiol Pol. 2023.

Please note that the journal is not responsible for the scientific accuracy or functionality of any supplementary material submitted by the authors. Any queries (except missing content) should be directed to the corresponding author of the article.

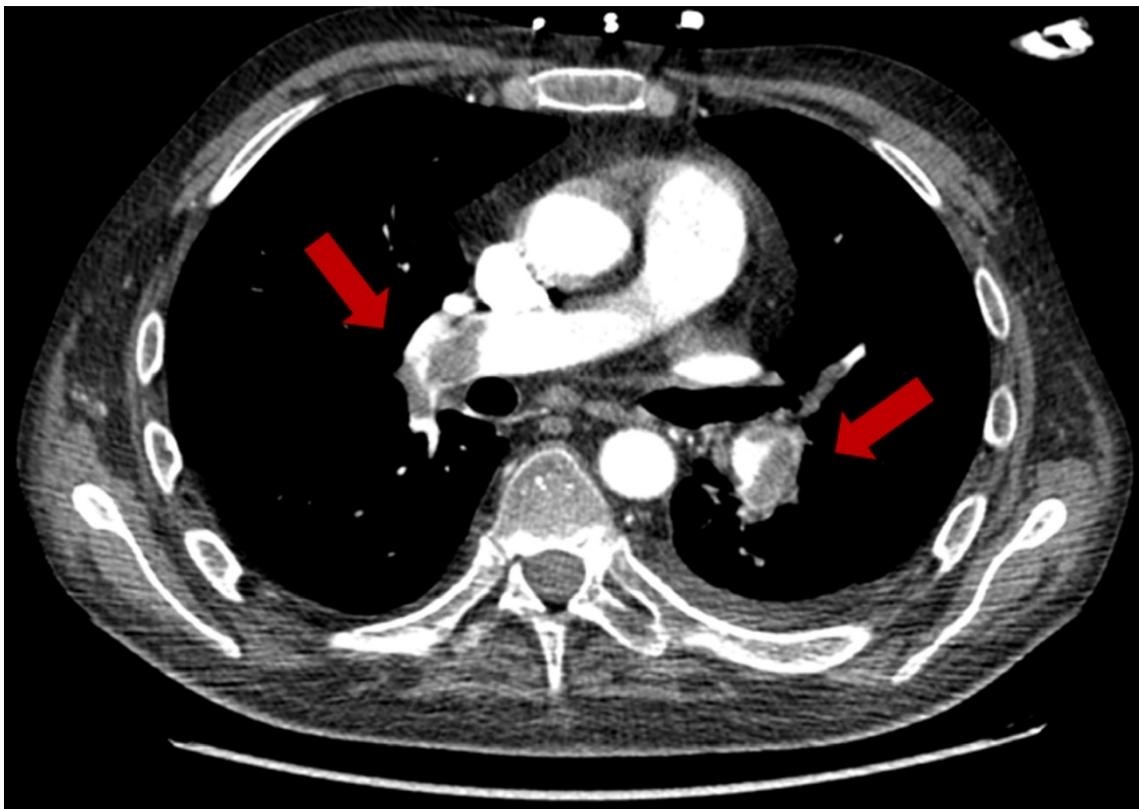

Figure S1. Thoracic CT angiography. Thoracic computed tomography (CT) angiography (axial view) showing bilateral pulmonary embolism with a subocclusive thrombus in the right pulmonary artery (right red arrow) and segmental thrombi in the left branches (left red arrow) with filling defects

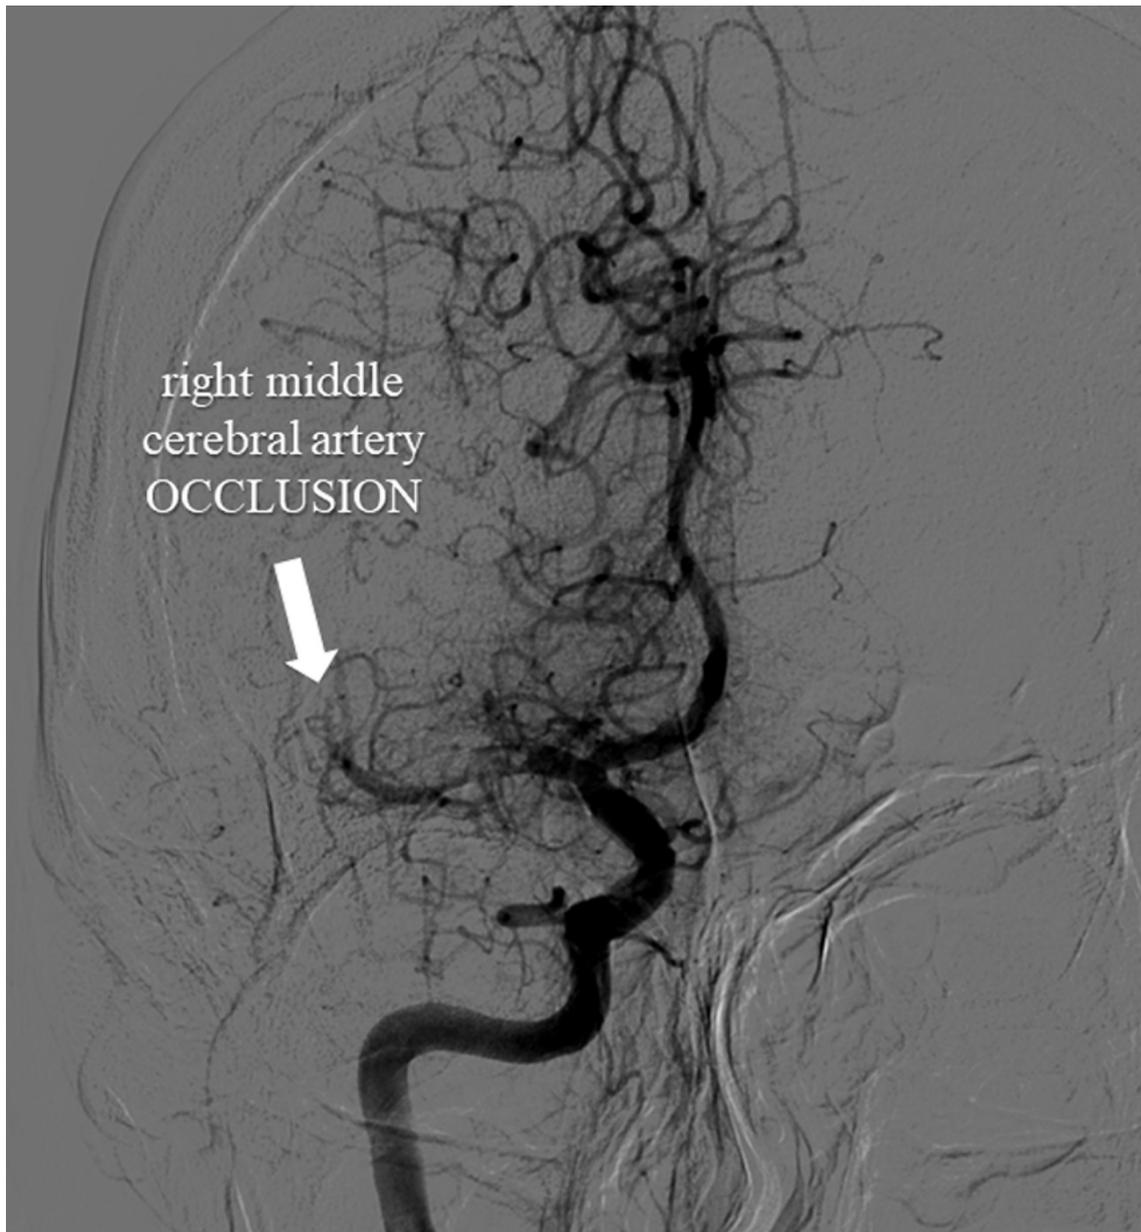

Figure S2. Angiography of the cerebral arteries. Angiography of the cerebral arteries revealing an occlusion of the proximal M1 and M2 segments of the right middle cerebral artery (white arrow)